

K-love serves us very well as a local radio station. It provides a positive programming alternative that is safe for all ages to listen to both at home and the workplace.

It would be a shame to replace K-love with a traditional commercialized station - we have plenty of those now. I fully believe that listening to positive programming affects one's subconscious in a fundamental way and improves moods, attitudes, and social consciousness.

There is too much immorality broadcast today, not to mention the just plain junk that gets called programming. Again, it would be a complete shame to deny quality programming such as this.

At the least, positive programming should be given an equal chance to compete with the rest of the commercialized programming out there, just in the interest of freedom of speech.